单词数：309个　小初3500词　　DATE:

Wukong landed on Mount Potalaka. A young man was meditating in the garden.

"Where's Guanyin?" asked the monkey. "She's making a basket," said the man. He glanced up at the monkey. "It's good to see you again, Wukong."

Wukong was puzzled. "How do you know my name?"

"Don't you recognize me?" said the man.

Wukong stared for a moment and then gasped. "You're Red Boy! You look like a kind spirit now.

"Yes," said Red Boy. "I'm not an evil demon anymore. And I have you to thank for that. You brought Guanyin to me. She has taught me all about Buddhism, and now I'm very happy."

"You're welcome," said Wukong. "You and I have a lot in common. We were both evil, causing all sorts of problems. Now we're both Buddhists."

Guanyin came over holding a basket. "Hello, Wukong," said the bodhisattva. "I knew you would come here today. I've been working on this basket all morning."

A look of confusion spread across the monkey's face. "That's a nice basket, Bodhisattva. But what is it for?"

"This basket has magical powers," said Guanyin. "I will catch the demon with it. Let's go."

Wukong returned to the river with Guanyin. The bodhisattva used a rope to lower the basket into the river. She recited a spell and then waited. After a moment she pulled the basket out of the water.

Wukong looked in the basket. A small goldfish was flopping around in it.

The monkey laughed. "I guess you need to try again, Bodhisattva. That's not the demon."

"This is my goldfish," said Guanyin. "It usually lives in my lotus pond. The pond is near my garden, where I teach my students. After years of listening to my lessons, the fish became a spirit. It escaped to Earth a few days ago. I had been wondering where it was."
