E77：Journey to the West （The Magic Fan）上

单词数：332个　小初3500词　　DATE:

For over a day, the wind from the fan carried Wukong. When he finally landed, he was far from the Iron Immortal's mountain.

Wukong looked around and saw a mountain nearby. "Mount Sumeru!" said Wukong. "The bodhisattva Lingji lives there. Maybe he can help me deal with the Iron Immortal. He was able to stop the great king Yellow Wind's wind magic."

The monkey went to Lingji's pagoda. The bodhisattva was sitting in his garden.

"Greetings, Bodhisattva," said Wukong. "Hello, Wukong," said Lingji. "It's good to see you again. I was just about to have tea."

Wukong and Lingji sat outside, drinking tea. The monkey told the bodhisattva everything that had happened with the Iron Immortal.

The bodhisattva handed a small stone to Wukong. "Keep this magic stone in your pocket. It will stop the wind from blowing you away."

"Thank you, Bodhisattva," said the monkey.

"Would you like to stay for lunch?" asked Lingji. "No, thank you," said Wukong. "I must get back to my companions. I need to get that fan from the Iron Immortal so we can continue west."

Wukong returned to the Iron Immortal's cave door. "Open up!" he shouted. "I need your fan!"

The Iron Immortal came out and wrinkled her nose. "I thought I got rid of you." She raised her fan. "I'll just have to wave harder this time!"

The woman waved the fan furiously. A terrible wind blew past Wukong. But the monkey didn't move.

The Iron Immortal's eyes burned with anger. "How did you—"

"The bodhisattva Lingji gave me a magic stone," said Wukong. "Your fan can't blow me away now."

The monkey pulled out his iron bar. "Now give me that fan!"

The Iron Immortal shot back into her cave. Before she could shut the door, Wukong turned into a cricket. He quickly leaped into the cave.

Silently he followed the Iron Immortal along a tunnel. When the woman reached a room, she sat down. She tucked the fan into her robe.
