Wukong and his companions were walking through a forest. "I'm glad the road goes through this shady forest," said the Tang Monk. "The sun is very hot this morning." Wujing nodded. "It's nice to walk in the shade."

Wukong looked around suspiciously. He knew that forests were often filled with dangers. Suddenly Bajie fell flat on his face. "Oof!" He climbed back to his feet and rubbed his nose. "I'm okay," he said. "I tripped on a rock."

The monkey peeked over the wall. Three young women were laughing and kicking a ball around. "I see three young women," said Wukong. "Let's ask them for some food," said Wujing. "That's a good idea," said Bajie. "I'll go talk to them." The pig headed toward the gate.

"Bajie, wait here," said the Tang Monk. He looked at his companions. "I will speak to the women. You three might frighten them." "Frighten them?" Bajie echoed. "Yes," said the Tang Monk. "After all, Bajie, you're a large, talking pig. Wujing, you're big and purple. And, Wukong, you're scary sometimes." The monkey shrugged.
