"Give us your money!" shouted one man. Wukong pulled out his iron bar. "Wukong," said the Tang Monk. "Remember, you must not harm people."

Wukong smiled. "I'm just going to talk to them, Master." He turned to the man who had shouted. "We have no money." "No money, huh?" said the man. "Well then, we're going to beat up all of you." Wukong laughed. "You don't realize who I am. I'm Sun Wukong, the Monkey King!"

"I don't care who you are," said the man. "We're dangerous robbers! Last night we robbed a very wealthy squire." The Tang Monk raised his eyebrows. "A squire?"

Wukong quickly recited a spell, which froze the robbers. Wujing rushed to the horses and opened one of the bundles. Inside were dishes, jewels, and other valuable items. Wujing gasped. "These items belong to Squire Kou! So do the horses!"

The Tang Monk bit his lip. "Squire Kou is a good man. We must return his belongings." Everyone agreed.

Wukong recited another spell, and the robbers became unfrozen. The monkey grew large, and fire burned in his eyes. "Get out of here!" he thundered. "And never steal again!" The robbers screamed and ran away. The travelers headed back toward town with the squire's horses. Soon they saw a group of soldiers on horseback.
