E104：Journey to the West （The Tang Monk and the River 唐僧和大河）下

单词数：273个　小初3500词　　DATE:

"Thank you," said the Tang Monk. He walked to the riverbank. "My companion wanted me to walk across that log, but—" The monk gasped.

"There's something wrong with your boat," he said to the man. "It has no bottom! Water is flowing right through it!" "The boat is safe," said the man. "Please climb in. Buddha is waiting."

With a bit more hesitation, the Tang Monk stepped into the boat. He was shocked to find that he didn't sink. He sat on the edge of the boat as Wujing led the horse aboard. Bajie and Wukong followed.

The boat glided swiftly across the river. Suddenly there was a splash.

The Tang Monk looked at the water and saw a body floating downstream. He screamed. "A man has drowned!"

Wukong put his hand on the monk's shoulder and smiled. "It's you, Master." "What?" said the monk. "Me?"

"Wukong is right!" cried Bajie. "It is you!"

"Look again, Master," said Wujing, smiling.

The Tang Monk looked at the body more carefully. It was wearing the same Buddhist robe that he was wearing. "It is me," said the monk quietly. "But how . . . ?"

"You got rid of your mortal body, Master," said Wukong. "You're a spirit now."

"You're one of us!" Bajie beamed.
